MISS EDITH WELLE

ICATION

We of the Senior Class of June 1941, dedicate this, our yearbook, to our friend and adviser, Miss Edith Welle. She has led us through four years of high school showing the same interest in our welfare throughout. And now, as we prepare to step out in the world to take our places, we express our sincere thanks for her capable guidance. We shall always associate Miss Welle with the happy years we have spent here in South Side. We express our appreciation for the concern she has shown in our social affairs and the industry with which she has worked with us to gain our ends.

LUCKY

"Come on, Lucky. Just lean on my arm. U-u-p. Easy does it. That's it, it's all over. There, don't we feel nice and comfy after fluffing those pillows? I can see you're feeling better. Already beginning to pretty up. You'll have just enough time to arrange that perky bow before visiting hour. I know someone who never misses a visit."

Miss Nutley was so sweet. I gave her one of my best smiles, the kind that Monnie always teased me for, even though it made my skin feel as if it were being stretched over a weaving loom. Gee, it seems funny. Here I am, nice and clean between two snowy sheets when I might just as well have been in a two-by-four jar half-filled with ashes. Honest, I can't tell whether I'm sitting on the stars or in the coal bin. I suppose a girl would be in seventh heaven when she hopes to be leaning on her fa—when she's going to be married in a few weeks. But then again, it kinda throws a shadow over a girl's spirits when she doesn't expect to get a last bear hug from her dad before he gives his best girl to the One. Hush, Lucky. You're just a silly dreamer, same as always. You're just building yourself up to an awful letdown.

My sore eyes felt like a ton when I tried to lift them today. They told me I had been very ill for a long time, a very long time. They have all been so kind and good. I never thought that nurses and doctors in white uniforms could be so human. They told me Monnie had hovered over his poor, little, burnt bird like a tender mother robin. Yes, I had been so ill, they had all wondered whether—but, never mind, everything was going to be all right now. Oh please, let everything go my way for a change. It has to. After all this, it has to. I didn't tell them what happened; they didn't ask. It makes me want to cry, they've been so swell. Monnie didn't ask either, but I've got to tell him everything. Everything, without a blank spot. We'll have to come to a clear understanding, this very day, in twenty minutes. In the end, I'll either have to take my heart and break it on the cement sidewalk or else I'll never greet another morning without singing, "He's mine." But will he want me? He's got to, after three years, he's got to. He's never failed me yet. He can't now, not Monnie. I should be panicky, but I'm not. I'm calm, strangely calm.

There, the visitors are beginning to stream in. Do I see a red mop? Be still, heart, you are not at the blacksmith's now. Monnie!

"How's my Lucky Star? Do I see a sad light in those pretty grey eyes?"

"Oh, Monnie, they're not pretty, they're burnt and sore, and oh, so tired. Monnie, there's something I've been wanting to tell you ever since——"

"Lucky, I never want to hear you mention that fire again. It's one of those terrible things that happen once in a lifetime. We must steel ourselves against it and try to forget."

"Monnie, the only way to forget is to tell you everything from the beginning. We'll never be happy if we turn our backs on something that will always be stepping on our heels."

I feel as if a suffocating veil is enveloping my throat, barring all speech. I can't tell. I must. But I can't. It's now or never. It's never, then. No, no, not never! Far better now, than never. The stifling veil slowly evaporates and I hear myself talking.

Monnie, my family is—well, it's nothing to be proud of. There were four of us. There's only three now. My brother hasn't been home for years now. He's—he's serving a life term. When Dad first heard, he cursed himself into a rage. "It's all my fault. I learned him to steal. He never woulda knowed what stealin' was. I showed him how. He was a clean-cut kid. He always liked drawin'. Said he was gonna be a architect. Might a been too, if he didn't have a lowdown drunken father always with a bottle in one pocket and stolen cash in the other. Yeah, it's my fault."

Poor old Mom sighed wearily, "We hadda eat, didn't we?"

"Sure, but I showed him how. It's all my fault. Josie, I got one daughter and from now on, I'm gonna show 'er what a real father is. Lottie's gonna get everything I stole from Jack. High school, college, fine clothes, fine weddin'. Yeah, Lottie ain't gonna end up in no reform school. It's all my fault."

Mom just shook her head. She knew he'd lay off drinking a few days and make a pretence of looking for work. Every time something like this happened, Dad would make his resolutions. We knew he meant well at the time but it only lasted a few days. He would stagger in and toss a roll of bills on the table. "Take it, Josie. Let's spree tonight. We'll be on Easy Street soon, sure."

Mom would pick it up resignedly and put it in her stocking. She knew as well as I did where it came from but she took it anyway. "May as well take it. Ain't nothing else to do. Don't know whose it is and couldn't give it back anyway without showing up that sorry father of yours. Don't make sense. Here, Lottie, run out and git some meat," she'd say.

I was ten, but I sized up the situation pretty well. It didn't seem right. I knew I'd choke on the meat at supper. Miss Lones, the fifth grade schoolteacher, had just told us a story the other day.

There were two brothers, one of whom was upright and sincere; the other crafty and dishonest. These two were shepherds, tending their flocks. The wicked one would steal healthy sheep from his brother at every shearing time. Just as the stolen sheep was about to be shorn, the Angel of Goodness looked down and, observing the hateful spectacle, caused the shears to turn about and pierce the black heart of the wretched shepherd.

As I heard Mom's whining voice, I knew I'd never go. Not if I had to starve a week. I slid to the door and bolted into the street. Mom opened the window and screamed, "Go git that there meat. Where's she gone, anyway? She's a queer kid, all right. Rather starve than eat meat that ain't got honest."

I was behind the yard fence by that time. About midnight, I crept through the broken cellar window, up the back stairs, and let myself in with my back door key. I slid into bed stealthily without undressing and cried bitter salt tears 'til morning. That happened when I was ten but in all these eight years, it's always stood out like one of those "I'll never forget" days.

Then I went to high school and I met you, Monnie. You were the only thing in my life that was clean and pure and strong. You gave me something to plan for, something worth striving for. It was you who spoke to me of higher education, of college. I remember how your eyes lit up almost as warmly as your red hair when I told you about my scholarship. You were so proud and I was so happy. We just sat in Capra's Drug Store and sipped star dust through our straws.

I was walking on sunbeams when I got home that night. Mom was squinting over some hopeless socks and Pop was slouched over the table talking fervently to Mom. As soon as I entered Pop snatched a newspaper and began skimming over the headlines. The feverish glint in Mom's eye was unusual and Pop's eyes were narrowed in a strange craftiness as if they had just been plotting sinful things. I didn't analyze too much. Tonight I didn't care. I was happy. Monnie was proud of me. A few minutes later, in bed, I caught the few hissed words, "Josie," "cinch," "insurance," "fire," "$6,000." I wasn't a mixer-in then and I'm still not, but when I heard such sums being tossed around, I sat up and listened, all ears and unashamed.

It seemed that Mr. Kingston, the landlord, had called Pop into his living room that afternoon. He never did impress me very favorably. I don't know what it was. I always felt kind of weird when I brought him the rent.

He'd reach for it indifferently as if it didn't matter and when his clammy fingers touched the bills, they would tighten strangely and snatch the money. I never wasted too much time paying the rent. Well, Dad was saying Mr. Kingston's place was worth $6,000 in fire insurance. Kingston thought with Dad doing the dirty work, he could rake in the chips. Dad's voice grew louder. "Sure, it's a cinch. We kinda start a fire. Nobody'd know the difference. We'll be living on Easy Street. Kingston's splitting fifty-fifty. He can't back out now. You can have all the china sets and Lottie can have all the silk stockings she wants. She's too handsome to dress up shabby."

Mom only said, "We gotta eat."

Invisible hands were tearing my head to ribbons. I couldn't think, I don't know that I wanted to. Dad was a drunk, pretty far gone. I suppose he stole too. But this, this—no, I must have heard wrong. Things like this didn't happen to high school girls. I didn't ask questions when Mom told me to pack a bag. "Aunt Marthy's been wanting you to visit her for a long time, Lottie. You just go and have a nice time," she said. I knew I was doing wrong. Monnie would do something, I thought. But they were my folks, no matter how bad they were. I didn't try to reason. I just went. I hadn't been there more than half a day, but I knew I had to come back. Monnie, you did that for me. You taught me that being a loyal citizen was more important than our own petty affairs. Your fineness always triumphed. It won now.

I came soon, but not soon enough. I was two blocks away from home when the screaming of the fire engines burst upon my ears. The flames writhed high and red and licked the cool stars greedily. Where were Mom and Pop? They were my folks. Two grim firemen disappeared in the flame-filled doorway. The blue-red tongues lapped the crumbling walls. "The old lady's inside," yelled some grimy kid. The tongues of horror teased the indifferent stars. They were my folks. I ran forward. That's all I knew.

Monnie, you know everything. You can't want me now. It's all right, I under—What's happening? The stars are falling and a strange night is closing in. Monnie!

"Lottie, what's wrong? There, it's passed now. You're smiling now. We've everything to live for. We've just begun to live. You'll never know another bitter moment. Lottie, your eyes! They stare but they do not see me. Your hands! They're cold and still. You're gone! My Lucky Star is gone forever!"

"Visiting hour is over," said a white-clad nurse.

THE RECORD BREAKER

Kiwana Park is a haven of haunting beauty in early June. The azure skies which gaze down upon it are tinted by lazily drifting clouds. Often a mild breeze excites the tall grasses across the lake. The green hills are bathed in warm sunshine. Beyond the clover, tall trees form a shady woodland retreat. Cushing springs dash over the rocks. The rare coolness of the woodland lanes is further enhanced by the sweet odors of wild flowers. The sun is reflected in the clear lake.

The worn path encircles the lake and winds up the hills. This aged path has many branches, the most used branch being the one which curves toward the hill overlooking the huge Kiwana Stadium.

The giant walls of the stadium tower over everything in the valley, the white cement contrasting sharply with the subdued colors of nature. Through its four wide gates, many millions of sports fans have come and gone.

The kindly millionaire who financed the erection of Kiwana Stadium was determined to make it a monument of lasting glory to outdoor sports. A well-kept quarter-mile cinder track borders about a third of the large athletic field. To the right of the field are a baseball diamond and football field and behind it are tennis courts and a soccer field. Close to the track are pits for high jumping, broad jumping, shot putting and pole-vaulting.

Track events featuring the Locksley Mile are the main cause of Kiwana Stadium's nation-wide fame. The Locksley Mile is the greatest distance-running event of the year. Since only the six best amateur milers in the country are ever given bids, the races have always been fast and the victories close. Some can recall that day in June, twelve years ago, when Vinnie Gorman shattered the world's outdoor mile record in this coveted mile.

Vinnie Gorman, too, remembers that day when the record fell at his feet. He remembers the glory which covered him throughout his high school and college years. Those long jogs around the lake in cool October, the spike-scarred indoor track in New York, the narrow victories in the autumn, cross-country races,—will live with him forever.

But strangely enough, the happiest episode in his athletic career came not through victory, but through miserable defeat. Among the dusty files of the newspapers lies the great story of his record-breaking Locksley Mile. To all the public, even Gorman's closest friends, this story is the only one which could possibly stand out. In sport circles, Vinnie is often asked, "How did you feel after being told that you had broken the world's record?"

Vinnie answers mechanically, "I was surprised! I really couldn't believe it!" or "That was the happiest moment of my life!" He then smiles inwardly, for he knew what would happen that day in Kiawana. He had broken the record twice in practice the preceding week. The truly happiest moment, however, cannot be effectively told at a banquet.

It happened two years ago. The huge Kiwana Stadium was alive with the cries of thousands of fans. On the sidelines about the track sat the old sport sages, Bill Orlinski, Art Smith, and Andy Carter.

To everyone, Vinnie seemed to be in the best of condition. As he limbered up, the marvel of his long, rhythmic stride could be witnessed. Strangers would never have thought he was as old as thirty-four. They contributed his two defeats in the recent minor races to "Lack of competition good enough to keep him in top form, but when interviewed by sport writers, Gorman surprised them by saying, "If I am badly defeated in the Locksley Mile, I will hang up my spikes. When I can no longer hope to establish any new records, I feel that running can no longer be of value to me." Gorman felt that in those last two meets he had slipped badly. Now would come the supreme test. None of his famous rivals in this Locksley Mile could be classed as " . . . not good enough competition."

The loud speaker boomed out, "Participants in the Locksley Mile will please go to their starting places." The six runners took to their places, and the officials began giving instructions and warnings. Gorman, having won the event six times in ten years, did not bother to listen to the officials, because for the first time in many years he was nervous.

He had seen great runners grow old, and finally become so defeated that they retired from the track scene. It seemed as if every eye in the stadium was upon him.

He saw a headline with the words "Old Vinnie Gorman has retired from the mile after his defeat in Kiwana yesterday." He could see all his reporter friends ignoring him after his defeat, to avoid embarrassing him. He did not hear the official shout, "Get set," and when the sharp report of the starting gun rang out, he was caught unprepared. He broke his usual pace to catch up with his rivals. So the race began.

Although the first lap around the quarter-mile track was fast, Vinnie managed to keep up with his rivals. The second lap was not quite so fast as the first, but two of the runners began slowly to edge forward, leaving the rest of the runners behind. Three of the other runners were biding their time, thinking it very foolish to take the lead so early in the race. Vinnie's long experience had taught him, however, that when a well-conditioned runner decides to take the lead, he does not usually weaken near the finish. When the leaders saw Vinnie increasing his speed, they lengthened their own strides, still holding the lead at the end of the second lap.

Near the end of the third lap, Vinnie's legs seemed to wilt beneath him, when the realization struck him that the two leaders were out in front by thirty yards. Suddenly, Gorman wanted to stop running. He pictured himself dipping his tired feet into one of the cold streams, when two of the runners jostled roughly by, one on each side of him. As Gorman tried to regain his third position, he stumbled and fell awkwardly upon his hands and knees. This accident gave the runner behind him new hope. He increased his pace, passing the weakened Gorman. When Gorman rose, he discovered that he held last position.

His weary legs refused to move faster when he tried to catch the fifth man, and his arms dangled loosely as he plodded into the fourth and last lap. Weariness, perspiration, and impending defeat clouded his vision, so that he could see only the bright colors of his rivals' jerseys through a queer mist. At last he heard the crowd cheer as the winner broke the tape.

Four more less audible shouts reached his ears and then he knew that he was alone—the last to finish. When he reached the long, seemingly endless home-stretch, the track began to whirl dizzily before him, and his heart sank lower with every step. He staggered toward the finish line.

Then a deafening cheer went up from the crowd! Flash-bulbs exploded from every angle. Sports writers and athletes were surrounding him, cheering! Through the loud incessant cheers of the spectators, Vinnie could feel the warm handclasp of Andy Carter and hear his familiar voice saying, "Do you hear that, Vinnie? Everybody is cheering YOU! You will never be forgotten. You never ran for personal glory,—you ran to break records. You will be forever immortal, Vinnie . . . !" Then Carter's voice was drowned out by the thundering applause.

That night Vinnie went walking alone, in the warm lake-path, as he did after each of his races at Kiwana. Being alone and so near to nature always soothed him mentally as well as physically. The full moon cast its soft glow over the park, and the stars shone like jewels from the deep blue heavens. When Vinnie reached the top of the hill, he turned about so that he could take a farewell glance at the old Kiwana Stadium. A queer sensation seized him. A tear rolled down his cheek, but Vinnie Gorman was very happy.

Nightmare

Caught, held
In its ghastly grip
Frightened, nauseated
By its immensity
I turn and twist
Struggling to escape.

Like dread quicksands
Its power increases
With the death struggles
Of its victim.

Night after night
I am enfolded,
Contained
In its tenuous strands.

Mocked,
Haunted
By its very inevitability
I yield,
And am saved
By blessed, joyous sunlight.

BEATRICE MITTLEMAN

Time

Time is a shadow,
Creeping,
Crawling,
Furtively along,
Pouncing
On us, the innocent.
I cannot stay him,
You cannot hold him.
Minutes,
Hours,
Pass by,
And we are years older.
His hands touch
Your hair
And leave their mark.
His kiss upon your brow
Leaves its imprint.
His pat upon your shoulder
Leaves you gnarled and bent.
Back!
Stay behind!
Spare me, Time!
Let me hold forever
These tender years.

"ON THE MARCH"

He was walking—a long time;
It seemed he had been walking forever.
It was raining. His uniform was smeared with mud,
The same mud which he sank into, up to his knees at each step.
His companions moved silently around him.
At first there had been some talk.
Now they were silent, except for an occasional curse
At the gray drizzle of rain that had started.
He stumbled. Fell. He was helped to his feet.
Again he fell. His numbed limbs pulled him erect.
He was miserable. He couldn't stand it much longer.
But wait!—He had a plan. He would go back—to her.
He walked more and more slowly.
His companions passed him till he was alone.
He slipped the heavy knapsack from his aching shoulders.
A truck approached him going in the opposite direction,
In the direction where he could find her.
With renewed strength he swung aboard.
Hours later, he stumbled across her threshold.
Who was she? His sweetheart? No! It was his mother.
"What are you doing here," she cried? "Where are the others?"
"I've quit, Mom! Those Boy Scouts are too tough for me."

You'll remember the day,
You'll remember the year
When you were gay
And had no fear.
Your work was done,
Your head was clear.
You knew darn well
Graduation was near.

THE WALLFLOWER

Young folks pass by, happy and gay,
A gala event is here this day,
Strains of song fill the breeze,
There's much laughter, jolly ease.

It's a perfect night for love,
Stars twinkle up above,
Couples glide in graceful dance,
To the music of romance.

A lonely figure sits aside,
His thoughts are anything but bright;
He seems now in an awful daze,
And beads of sweat roll down his face.

He suffers, silent in despair,
His sad visage gets in your hair,
But he may only sit and sit—
Because his too tight pants have split.

GIFTS OF GOD

Dashing, billowing, swirling wave,
Calm, serene, never-ending brook.

Tall, stately, majestic tree,
Small, insignificant blade of grass.

Cold, biting, jovial wind,
Warm, purring, delightful breeze.

Bright, joy giving, eternal sun,
Enticing, illuminating, queenly moon.

For gifts such as these,
Dear God, we thank you!

HIGH ON A HILL

Here am I, standing on this hill.
I've been here for many hours now,
Just as always, waiting,—until
The sun will fade and somehow
With it will go a brilliant light
And in its place another bright—
But yet a different light.
The moon, its place will take,
And with it stars and breezes soft.
The loveliness of night will break
And lead my thoughts aloft.
I stand here on this hill so high;
I can almost touch the sky
Or falling star, as it goes by.
I find the night air cool and fresh
And everything about is still.
And though it brings a chill to flesh,
I want to stay upon this hill.

NORMA ORDA

My Thoughts Stray Not

Under the evening sun, the garden lay asleep,
The flowers shed fragrance into the quiet breeze,
And as I await you, I watch a flashing fish
Gaily splash around its lily-sprinkled pool.

Into the beauty of the night you come
And with you, comes a beauty all your own,
A beauty so divine, the garden with its sweet, sweet pleasures,
Is forgotten as I see your face.

Your eyes are like the starry bits in the heavens above
Your hair shines like the rays of sunlight, yet more gold;
How powerless are the things of nature
To shake me from my thoughts of you!

DOROTHEA NEIGEL

WHY?

Why do we learn?
Why do we teach?
Why do we earn?
Why do we preach?
The world is only a story,—
A book of everlasting glory—
A song of never-ending fame—
A picture never the same.
Who knows what it has in store?
In future years that we cannot adore
We can only learn, only teach, only earn
And only preach, the values we receive from the world's open door.

The End of the Road

When upon life's toilsome road,
Tired and weary from your heavy load,
Comes the time for work to cease,
The evening brings a quiet peace.

Silently and slowly it settles around you,
It seems as if it cannot be true,
For there before your eyes you behold,
The heavenly gate of shining gold.

Flashing and glittering it lightens the skies,
So bright it almost blinds your eyes,
Around the gate, the most beautiful scene,
Colorful flowers, and trees so green!

Suddenly the gate swings open wide—
And you catch a glimpse of the world inside:
Jasper and ruby, and silver and gold,
And wonder and loveliness and beauty untold—

It makes you happy and lifts your load,
For there before you is the end of the road.

RUTH WALLING

GOLD

The basis of our dollar bills,
The precious metal of the hills,
The necklaces in days of old—
Everything depends on gold!

The reason for a million crimes,
The wealth behind a thousand dimes,
The statues, now covered with mould—
Everything depends on gold!

A priceless thing, once used in the way
That we use tin and nickel today,
The thing that makes the robber bold—
Everything depends on gold!

The want of it can cause a war
On ours, or any foreign shore.
The lust for it is a million years old—
Everything depends on gold!

But, even though man has much wealth
He's no good without his health.
So I contradict what I've just told—
Not everything depends on gold!

Such girls are loved by fools like me—
Who the heck wants to hug a tree!

STAN MINE

BOWLING CLUB

Girls' Bowling is one of the newest sports to be adopted by the South Side girls. It has proved a very popular sport; many girls engage in it. Certain days in the week are set aside at the bowling alleys for the South Side Girls' Bowling Club. Miss Walters is the adviser.

HONOR SOCIETY

To be a member of the South Side chapter of the National Honor Society is one of the greatest honors which can be bestowed upon a high school pupil. The standards of the Honor Society are Scholarship, Leadership, Service, and Character. Betty Bordeleau is the President; Phil Lehner, Vice-President; Dorothy Stumpf, Secretary. The faculty adviser is Mrs. Batt.

DEBATING CLUB

Under the advisership of Mr. Kirk, South Side's debating team, captained by Lillian Schulsinger, has consistently advanced to a position of prominence in scholastic debating circles. This year the team had an exceptionally successful season, placing fifth in the state-wide tournament. The South Side contingent represented in the State Tournament consisted of Lillian Schulsinger, Dolores Schreck, Frances Ganek, Marvin Segal, and Rhoda Krueger, alternate. Marvin Segal was selected for a position on the honorary All-State Debating team.

THE OPTIMIST

The Optimist staff consists of students who are earnestly interested in the different phases of magazine publication. They write, compile, and correct all the material printed. The staff is headed by Dorothy Malamis as editor; Rhoda Krueger, assistant editor; Frieda Bernstein, business manager; Martin Felder, publicity agent. Miss Neal is the faculty adviser.

• 59

AMERICAN IDEALS' CLUB

The American Ideals Club, sponsored by Mr. Finkel, visits sights of historic interest, stresses the American way of life, and strives always to develop traits of good-citizenship and love of country. The officers of the club are Norma Orda, President; Leona Abramowitz, Vice-President; and Elinor Pierce, Secretary.

FORUM

The Forum is primarily a discussion group. Its members present the pro's and con's of all present-day problems, both national and international. Occasionally, the Forum conducts an open meeting in Assembly, and invites the whole school to participate. Mr. Joyce is adviser to the club.

LAW CLUB

Under the supervision of Mr. DeLisi, the Law Club meets every other week. The students make up and enact court trials.

The officers are: President, Melven Krueger; and Secretary, Shirley Pretiks.

LIBRARY STAFF

The Library Staff, a group of students under the guidance of Miss Helen J. Wolfs, assists in the management of the library. Their duties are checking and slipping books, collecting and distributing study slips, keeping the shelves in order, and aiding students in finding material.

MIXED CHORUS

MUSIC CLUB

The Music Club, under the advisership of Miss Schneider, provides a cultural background for its members. The Club listens to recordings of operas, of symphonic orchestras, and of great singers. The aim of the Club is to develop a more understanding appreciation of good music among high school pupils.

GIRLS' GLEE CLUB

DRAMATIC CLUB

The Dramatic Club offers all students the opportunity to display their ability as actors in the many enjoyable plays that are presented under the direction of Miss Waugh. The officers are: President, Albert Leon; Vice-President, Morris Cooper; Secretary, Ethel Lipowitz.

INTERNATIONAL CLUB

The International Club provides, for students interested in communicating with other students of foreign lands, the opportunity to make these contacts. Its ultimate aim is to give the members, through such correspondence, a better understanding of other nations.

SCIENCE CLUB

The Science Club, under the able direction of Mr. Kanengieser, provides for its members interesting discussions and demonstrations pertaining to all fields of science. The President is Harvey Segal; Vice-President, Joseph Steinberg; and Secretary, Lorraine Brandt.

FASHION DESIGN CLUB

The desire to help the individual girl to study more thoroughly and choose more wisely clothing to fit her needs and purse, is the primary purpose of the Fashion Design Club. Miss Collison is the adviser. The officers are: Lila Roth, President, and Sandra Manhoff, Secretary.

DANCE GROUP

The South Side Dance Group, under the expert direction of Miss Rose Popkin, has taken great strides in learning the technique of the modern dance.

At such times as conventions, festivals, and at South Side performances, a chosen group of members demonstrate for the audience. The dances are composed by Miss Rose Popkin and the music is original, composed by Mrs. Ruth Sherman.

GIRLS' SPORTS

Have you ever been to Weequahic Park to watch the hockey girls practice? Have you ever watched the Dance Group practice on the stage on Monday afternoons? Have you seen our bowlers in the bowling alleys? If you have, you have seen many of our senior girls participating. This graduating class contains a large and talented group of girl athletes.

The Dance Group meets every Monday for two periods to practice. The girls all love the work. It's actually inspiring to see them dance. Miss Popkin is their leader, and Mrs. Sherman composes the music for their dances. The girls practice various movements and dances and are encouraged to make up their own dances. The following seniors have taken active part in the Dance Group since they were in 2A: Anita Shapiro, Lillian Schulsinger, Frances Berkowitz, Frances Ganek, Hazel Griffin, Evelyn Kogan, and Diane Scharf.

The Hockey girls are led by Miss Walters. Those who have belonged for one term are Dolores Jones, Marie Filce, Olive Heick, Ruth Walling, and Florence Richardson. The two-term girls are Jean Groener, Eileen Coombs, Sophia Kotik, and Mary McCarthy. They practice in the Weequahic field during the hockey season. The hockey teams play among themselves and with other teams. Near the end of the season, the group takes a test to determine which of them shall receive letters and emblems.

The Bowling Club is the newest athletic club in South Side. The group goes over to a neighborhood bowling alley which is reserved for them on certain afternoons. Miss Walters is their adviser. At the present date, Eileen Coombs has made the highest score, 168. The other girls are: Jean Groener, Beatrice Ross, Shirley Pretiks, Shirley Arons, Carol Amdur, Dolores Jones, Marie Filce, Mae Eisman, Harriet Schein, Florence Richardson, Viola Kohlbacher and Eileen Coombs.

SENIOR

One of the largest and finest groups of athletes ever to win South Side letters is in the class of June, 1941. The boys have all won the "Black and Gold" for four years and have done their best to place South Side in the spotlight of fame.

Much of the credit for our teams' successes goes to the coaches. Mr. Thornton is our football coach; Mr. Leon, our baseball coach; Mr. Anderson, cross-country; and Mr. Stoll, our swimming coach.

One of the most outstanding of the senior athletes is Albert Malekoff. "Boomie" has earned four varsity football letters. This year he was elected captain of the team. He proved himself such an able player in the backfield that he was chosen as a member of the All-City Team, and was awarded a trophy for being the highest scorer in city-wide competition. "Boomie" has also earned two varsity letters in baseball.

Robert Goeb has won letters in both varsity football and baseball. "Goeby" is one of South Side's greatest forward-passers. His accurate passes have pulled many a game out of the fire. He also was a member of the All-City Team. As catcher on the varsity baseball team, Goeb proved himself one of the best players in the city.

Berge Parigian, although he originally played the halfback position in football, became one of the best left-ends South Side has ever had. Berge's best playing was shown in the end-around play when he carried the ball and very often made touchdowns.

Larry Emmons, one of the smallest men on the baseball team, is our fast and capable shortstop. He has won varsity letters twice.

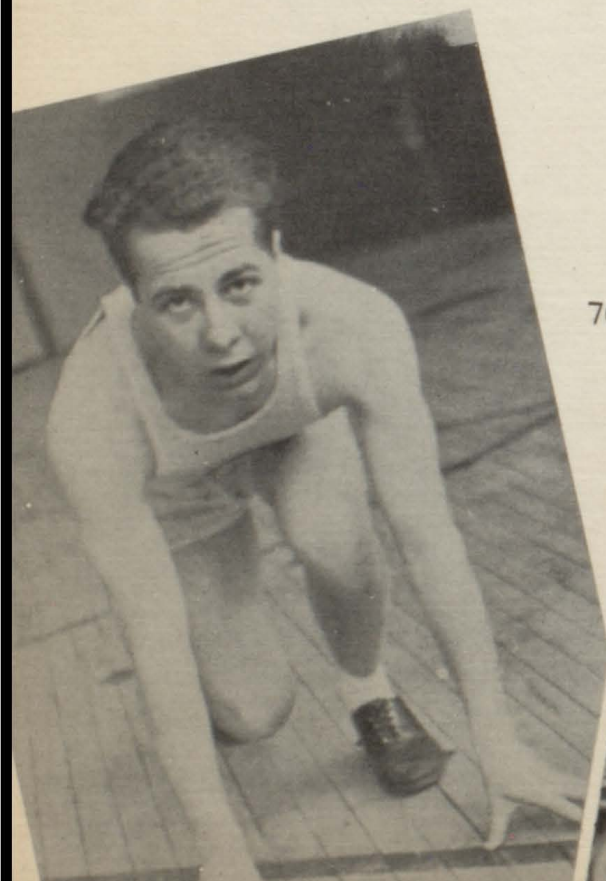

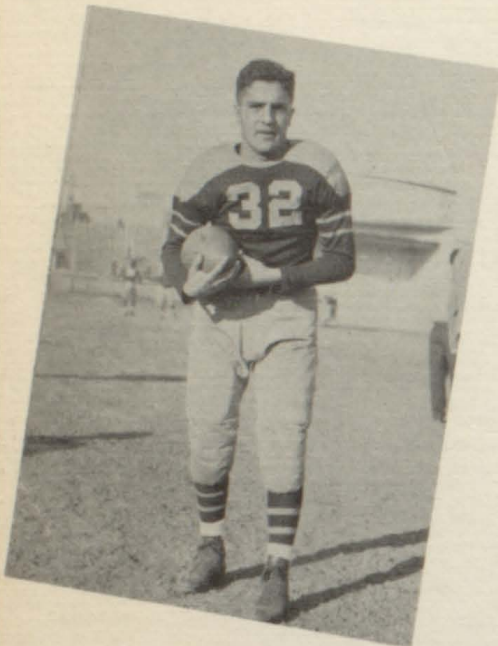

Vincent Ribes was the fastest man on both the track and the football team. He is best known for his speed in the 220 and quarter-mile, but he also is no mean broad-jumper. As a backfield man on the football squad, he was fast, and dangerous to our opponents.

Arnold Lau did a fine job as right end on the football squad for three years. "Arnie" was not only a good offensive and defensive player, but a good pass receiver, too. He has also played baseball and has been a member of the track team.

Arthur Gottfried played center on the football team. He was the smallest and lightest man on the team. "Arty" was the fellow who backed up the play, and broke up the plays of the opponents.

Jules Pomerantz was a member of the Varsity football team, and though one of the heaviest men on the team, he was also one of the fastest. "Puffy" was the fellow who made those holes for the touchdown plays to go through.

LETTERMEN

Robert Goldblatt proved himself one of the finest linesmen in the city. "Ribby" started playing on the "Frosh" team, and his brilliant playing soon put him on the varsity squad. He has three varsity letters to his credit.

Tom Lakos has been a member of the baseball team for two years. "Greek" has played almost every position on the team, but starred particularly at first base. He was one of the heaviest hitters on the team.

"Sal" Cuttitta has earned varsity letters in both baseball and swimming. Sal was one of the finest pitchers on the team. He also won a medal for being the best diver in city competition.

Some other ace swimmers in the June, '41 class are Norman Herman, Louis German, and Stanley Mine. "Normie" excels in the breast-stroke and won a medal in the city meet; German is a back-stroke ace, and took a place in the city meet. Mine also won a varsity letter and won a medal in the city meet.

June, '41, is not so well represented in track as in the other sports, but our few men are the best anywhere. George Vogt is one of the most brilliant track stars since Herman Goffberg. "Georgie" ran the half-mile and also the mile. He set a record at Weequahic Park in the three-mile cross-country run.

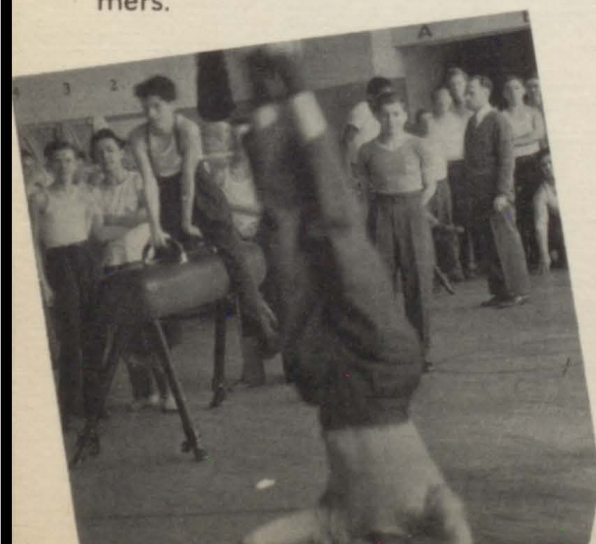

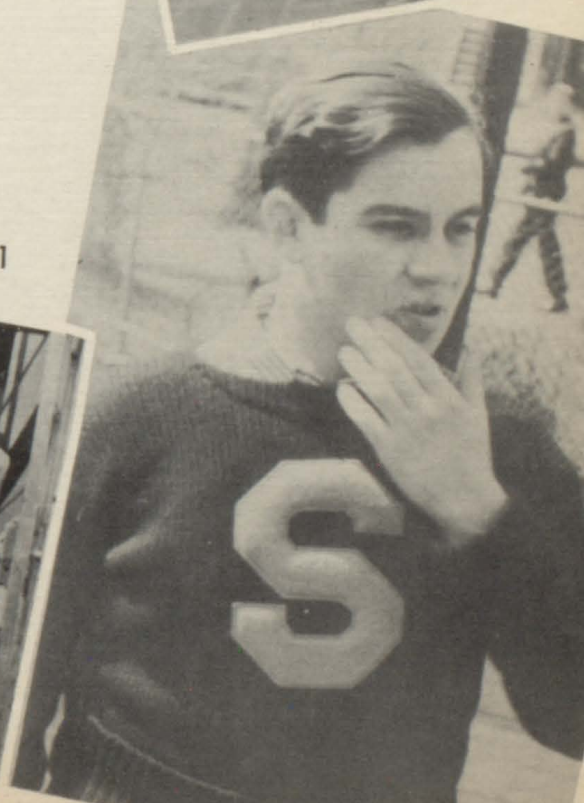

William Hutchins, the ace high-jumper, set a new record for South Side, and was also selected as a member of the All-City relay team. Hutchins has two varsity letters to his credit.

William Bryant is another versatile member of our track team. Bill is on the cross-country team, runs the half-mile, and is also a high-jumper of no mean ability.

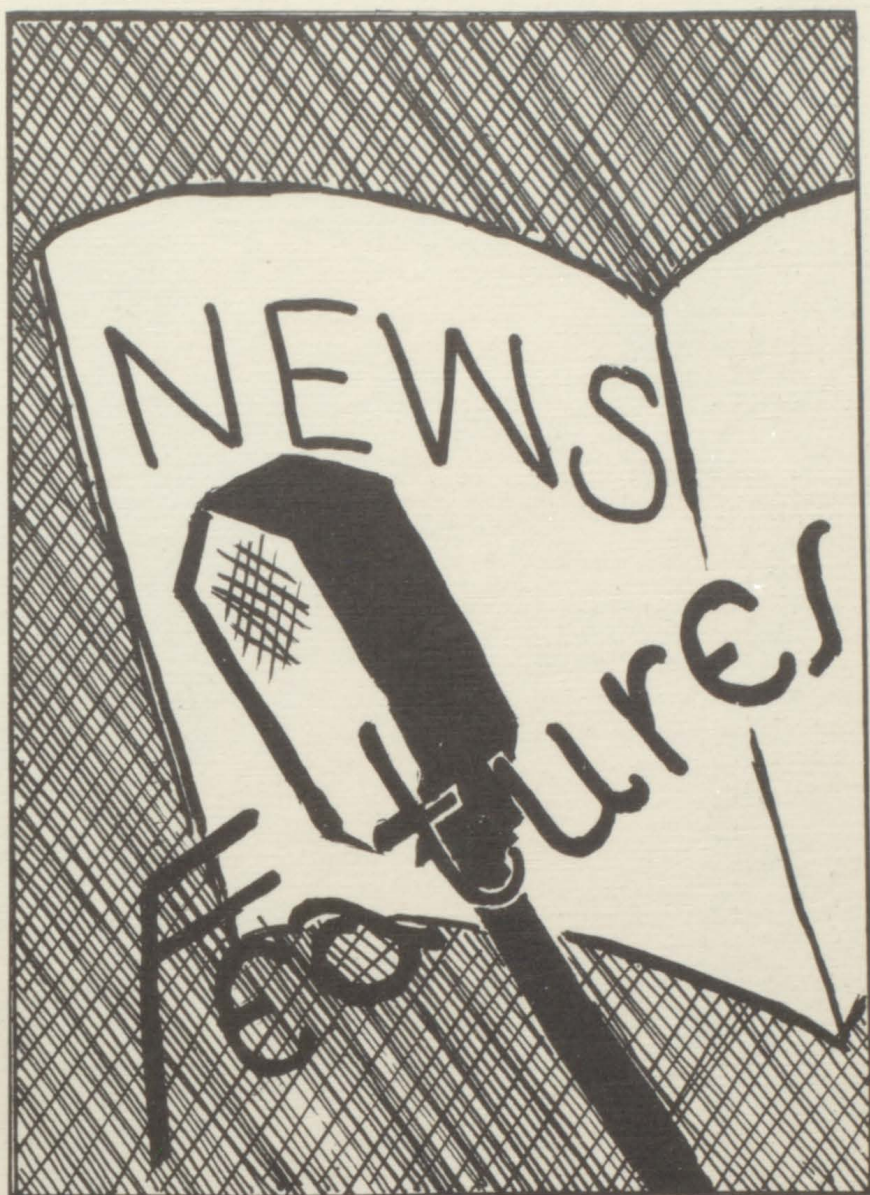

James Young starred with Bill Bryant on the cross-country team, and also ran the half-mile.

Our fencing team has had a very successful season under the tutelage of Dean Parsons, winning over half its matches. The captain of the team, Paul Brooke, contributed greatly to the success.

Attention should also be paid to the managers. Albert Brodsky was manager of the varsity football team; Milton Litwack and Robert Hautzik managed the baseball team; Fred Rall guided the fencing team, while Edward Rothrock acted as manager for the varsity swimmers.

BE HOPEFUL

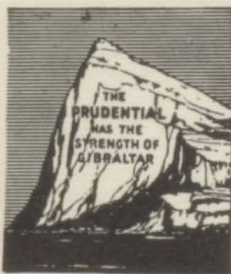

Sometimes the journey seems rough and long on the high, steep road called Life.

But youth can make the ascent seem a lot less difficult by keeping in mind one simple, yet impressive, truth—

The top stratum in any business or profession offers ample room for those of ability.
